Statement of Editorial Policy

The object of Classical Antiquity is to publish significant research on topics from the entire spectrum of ancient Greek and Roman cultures in the context of the ancient Mediterranean. No particular area or methodology is preferred. In general, the editors look for articles that combine detail with a broad vision of the subject. We discourage narrowly technical work and papers that in the judgment of the editors are too brief, normally defined as 20 manuscript pages or less. The journal does not consider reviews but welcomes critical appraisals of current work on major authors or topics. Classical Antiquity appears twice a year.

Instructions to Contributors

Address submissions to the Editor, Classical Antiquity, University of California, Department of Classics, 7233 Dwinelle Hall #2520, Berkeley, CA 94720-2520. Text, quotations, notes, bibliography and figure captions must all be double-spaced, and all material (including illustrations and a 300-word abstract) should be submitted in duplicate. Cite secondary literature in shortened form in the notes, providing full information in a bibliography; cp. most recent articles in Classical Antiquity. For abbreviations, refer to the American Journal of Archaeology 95, no. 1 (1991), 1–16.

Illustrations should be submitted in photocopied form with manuscripts, but for final copy authors must obtain original photographs of art works from official sources (museum, excavation or photo archives such as Alinari in Rome, Hirmer in Munich, or the photographic collections of the Deutsches Archäologisches Institut in Athens, Rome, etc.).

Submissions are refereed anonymously. Contributors should omit their names and other identifying references from the manuscript, and include a cover letter with name, address, and title of article. Previous publications by the contributor should be referred to in the third person.

Proofreading is the responsibility of the author. Final acceptance of illustrated manuscripts is conditional on receipt of good quality photographs for reproduction.
